

Who is a protection officer?

Under the Domestic Violence Act, 2005, Protection Officers have been appointed by the Government to help the aggrieved woman in filing the case against her husband or against any male adult person who has committed domestic violence and who is in domestic relationship with the petitioner. The Protection Officer facilitates the women to approach the court by providing legal aid and get appropriate relief from the courts concerned. Further, they execute the orders of the Court wherever necessary with the help of police the Legal Services Authorities Act, 1987, the National Legal Services Authority (NALSA) was set up to help vulnerable sections of society with free legal services. According to NALSA, those eligible for free legal aid include

- Women
- Trans persons
- Children
- Senior citizens
- Members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes
- Industrial labourers
- Victims of mass disasters (including industrial disasters)
- Persons with disabilities

- Victims of human trafficking
- Those with low annual income, a metric which differs state by state.

Currently, Tamil Nadu provides free legal aid to people whose annual income is Rs 3 lakhs or less, in addition to those from the above-mentioned categories. A woman or a member of SC/ST or other communities as mentioned under NALSA is eligible for free legal aid, regardless of their annual income

Free legal aid is available at any stage of a case. They solve disputes in counselling and mediation centres as well, and do not always go to court unless necessary.

SERVICE PROVIDERS UNDER DV ACT

Under the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, service Providers are the members from notified Non Governmental Organizations They co-ordinate with all the stakeholders in getting justice and relief to the victims of domestic violence. The Service Providers help the aggrieved women in filing the Domestic Incident Report, provide accommodation in the short stay homes along with their children, counsel them and help the aggrieved to get medical treatment if necessary. They also impart them with vocational training to help them secure employment and sustainable income.
