

SEXUAL ABUSE

What is Sexual Coercion?

Sexual coercion is when someone is pressured, manipulated, or threatened into saying yes to sex. It's not always violent, but it still counts as abuse. It can happen to anyone—men or women, in any kind of relationship, even in marriage. The person may agree out of pressure, but often feels uncomfortable or violated afterward.

Examples of Sexual Coercion

- When the other partner is constantly asking for sex
- Saying things like, “I thought you love me...won’t you help me finish”
- When a partner tells you that it’s your responsibility to have sex with them
- If they tell you that they will leave or break up with you if you don’t have sex with them
- Saying that they will go looking for sex elsewhere if you don’t consent
- They give you drugs or alcohol to lower your guard down
- Keeping money or other needs from you for not having sex
- When they tell you that it’s a favor that you owe them
- They might try and keep you from using protection or birth control

There might be a chance that none of these are things that you have experienced from your partner, but you’re still left feeling violated, confused, guilty or dirty.

The best thing that you can do is to go with your gut feeling.

Ways to Avoid or Resolve Coercion

Coercion is a conflict that shouldn’t have to escalate down the road. In a lot of these situations, it can be resolved or avoided by proper communication. It’s okay to tell the other person that you aren’t up to having sex if you are not comfortable with it.

But there are times when the other person simply does not get a hint. People that don’t respect other people’s boundaries and privacy will only press these same issues even further.

In more serious situations, coercion can be the antecedent that leads up to a sexual assault. Now is the time to do something about it before it's too late. Now is the time to show that person the door.

When It's No Longer Coercion

We've already mentioned that there is a fine line between sexual coercion and physical assault (rape).

It's a crime if your partner, or spouse, crosses that line. Here are a number of incidents that you should be aware of.

- Even though you've said no, they don't stop
- If they threaten you with physical abuse in order to get you to have sex
- When they resort to physical force to get you to submit sexually to them
- If they threaten you with turning you in to the authorities for illegal activity
- Force you into having sex by threatening to expose your immigration status
- They cause you to take drugs or alcohol unknowingly and then have sex with you

If you're ever put in one of these situations, you need to leave and get help when it's safe to do so. You need to call 181 and have a report taken.

Unfortunately, rape can even take place within a marriage when the other person is forced to have sex with the other spouse. Marital rape is very real, and should not be taken lightly.

Just because sexual coercion isn't considered to be sexual assault, doesn't mean that you have to put up with it. If your partner's or spouse's words are threatening, manipulative, or abusive in nature, you don't need to sit around and do nothing about it.

You deserve to have your boundaries respected, even when it's a husband or wife.

QUESTION & ANSWERS

1. Does verbal abuse fall under domestic violence?

Yes, verbal abuse is recognized as a form of domestic violence. Domestic violence includes various types of abuse, such as physical, sexual, verbal, emotional, spiritual, cultural, social, and financial abuse. Each of these can deeply impact a person's well-being, and no one should have to suffer in silence.

2. What is Physical abuse?

It is directly assaulting a person like pushing, slapping, punching, kicking, choking, biting, shaking, inflicting burns, hair pulling, using a weapon, for example, belting, stoning, flogging with a stick, spearing, etc.

3. What is Sexual abuse?

Trying to force someone to have sex or take part in sexual acts against their will, or using an object or body part to penetrate the vagina, mouth or anus without permission or consent, injuring sexual organs, intentionally hurting someone during sex, forcing someone to have unsafe sex, without protection against pregnancy or sexually transmitted diseases etc.

4. What is Verbal abuse?

Verbal abuse includes the intent to humiliate, degrade, demean, threaten, coerce or intimidate, and includes the use of derogatory language or continual 'put-downs' to highlight a particular part of a person's being or their societal role. Consequently, the person may experience this abuse as an attack on their identity resulting in psychological harm

5. What is Emotional abuse?

Emotional or psychological abuse can leave a person feeling that they are to blame for the problems in the family or in a relationship. Verbal abuse is closely related to emotional abuse.

6. What is Spiritual or cultural abuse?

It is when power and control deny a partner or family member their human, cultural or spiritual rights and needs. It can also include using religion or culture as an excuse to commit particular abuses to justify the behaviour.

7. What is Social abuse?

Perpetrators commonly use social abuse and isolation to separate the victim from supportive friends, family and community agencies.

8. What is Economic or financial abuse?

This involves the unequal control of finances in a relationship or family and the deprivation of basic necessities.

9. If there has been no physical abuse but only emotional or verbal abuse, is it still taken seriously by the law? Do legal authorities require a witness to take action?

Absolutely. Under the Domestic Violence Act, verbal and emotional abuse are acknowledged forms of abuse, just like physical or sexual abuse. If the abuse happens digitally (through texts, emails, or voice messages), it's important to save and record this evidence. You are not alone in this. Please don't isolate yourself—reach out to trusted neighbors, family members, or colleagues who can support you and serve as witnesses if needed. Seeking help from counselors or government-run family counseling centers can also help document your experiences and provide professional guidance. Your feelings and experiences are valid, and support is available for you. If you need help, please don't hesitate to reach out to a trusted person or a support organization.

10. How to Create Evidence for Sexual Abuse That Happens in Private?

If you are experiencing sexual abuse in a private setting, gathering evidence can feel overwhelming, but there are ways to document it and seek support. Share your experience with a close friend, family member, or counselor who can later serve as a witness to your distress and statements. Keeping a journal with dates, times, and details of each incident can also help. Visit a doctor or the hospital as soon as possible. Explain what happened so it can be recorded in medical files, which may serve as official evidence later. If there are any injuries, bruises, or physical signs, the doctor's report can be crucial.

11. What evidence do I have to submit to file a complaint under the Domestic Violence Act?

As a matter of fact the Domestic Violence Act does not mandate any evidence, but to have strong points these are recommended. Any email, or WhatsApp conversations which depict bitter relations or bad treatment from the husband.

If there is any physical abuse, then the Medico-Legal Certificate (MLC) can be used.

Any Audio or Video recording which shows that you are being suffered. If you could prove occasions before the Magistrate of Domestic Abuse through Recorded messages/proof of marks/recorded video proof containing violence would be enough to make a case of Domestic Abuse.

12. I Don't Want to Go to the Police Station—Is There Another Way to Seek Help?

Yes, you do not have to go to the police station to seek help. According to the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, you can report abuse or seek support through:

- Protection Officers – These officers are assigned to assist survivors and ensure they get the necessary legal and emotional support.
- Service Providers (Government Organizations & NGOs) – Various government and non-government organizations offer free counseling, shelter, and legal aid.
- Magistrate – You can directly file a case before a magistrate for protection orders, financial support, or any legal relief.

Do you want me to provide the contact for protection officers? If yes, please share your district.

13. Does Reaching Out to the Police Lead to Separation?

No, reporting domestic abuse to the police does not automatically lead to separation. If you file a case under the Domestic Violence Act, it is first handled by a Protection Officer, whose primary role is to provide support and find solutions that prioritize your safety and well-being. The focus is not just on punishment but also on offering legal protection, counseling, and necessary interventions to help you make informed decisions. The goal is to ensure your safety, dignity, and rights, whether that involves reconciliation, protective measures, or legal action.

14. Who is a protection officer?

Under the Domestic Violence Act, 2005, Protection Officers have been appointed by the Government to help the aggrieved woman in filing the case against her husband or against any male adult person who has committed domestic violence and who is in domestic relationship with the petitioner. The Protection Officer facilitates the women to approach the court by providing legal aid and get appropriate relief from the courts concerned. Further, they execute the orders of the Court wherever necessary with the help of police ### 15. How to prevent conflicts in front of children?

Have conversations with your partner when your child is not at home.

Utilize your office breaks to discuss matters over the phone.

Arrange for your child to stay with a trusted caregiver for a few days during challenging times.

If situations don't improve, explore options like enrolling your child in a residential school.

If conflicts still occur, make an effort to address the issue by talking to your child, offering apologies for any inappropriate behavior, and reassuring them that things will get better soon. Your child's well-being matters, and even small steps toward a peaceful environment can make a big difference.

16. How to handle the situations when your children are also aware of what is happening?

There are different methods to deal with children

Keep open communication with them using code words or signals.

Minimize exposure by engaging in community activities or staying with trusted friends.

Create safety plans and emergency exit strategies.

Offer emotional comfort through books, music, or other coping activities.

Work on financial independence to create a secure future.

17. How to overcome social stigma?

Social stigma exists in our society, and at times, all you may hear is ""no."" But remember, taking the first step is crucial. It's only when you take that step that you open the door to many 'yeses' that can help and support you. From shelter to legal aid, there are people and organizations ready to assist. Believe in yourself, and don't lose your identity by keeping yourself confused.

18. Will my husband be punished if I file a case under DV act?

No, filing a case under the DV Act does not lead to criminal punishment for your husband. The DV Act primarily aims to ensure that victims are heard, protected, and their rights safeguarded, rather than imposing criminal penalties.

34. How will life be after I come out of this relationship?

Leaving someone you once loved is never easy, and the initial phase may feel overwhelming. But as you move forward, you'll rediscover your own identity and recognize your true self-worth. This is a chance to focus on both personal and professional growth—an opportunity to build the life you deserve. Prioritizing self-care, maintaining a nutritious diet, and nurturing your mental well-being will be essential. Spend time with your loved ones, take your kids out, and pursue a career or passion that brings you fulfillment. With time, healing, and self-love, you will find strength, happiness, and a future filled with possibilities.

35. What would I do for my survival and support?

If you're facing challenges related to finding a place to stay and ensuring safety, there are options available. NGOs and government shelter homes can provide you with a safe place to stay. Additionally, some NGOs empower you to achieve economic independence. You can access temporary support systems, engage in skill development, and complete courses to enhance your career prospects.

36. I feel trapped in a cycle of abuse—hurt, then convinced to stay, only for the same behavior to repeat. How can I break free and prioritize my safety and well-being?

The cycle of abuse follows a recurring pattern:

Tension Building – The abuser becomes irritable and angry, while the victim tries to keep the peace. Fear, humiliation, and hopelessness set in, sometimes leading to unhealthy coping mechanisms. As tension escalates, the abuser may turn violent, leaving the victim feeling powerless.

Making-Up – After the abuse, the abuser apologizes, shows remorse, or shifts blame onto the victim. They may offer gifts or promises of change, creating false hope that the cycle will end.

The Calm – A temporary peace follows, where the abuser acts as if nothing happened. The victim may feel a false sense of security, but the cycle inevitably repeats.

Breaking the Cycle
Abuse does not stop on its own. Seeking professional help—whether through therapy, support groups, or trusted loved ones—is crucial. Without intervention, the cycle continues, often becoming worse over time.

You Deserve a Safe and Fulfilling Life

If an abuser promises change but does not take real steps to seek help, don't believe empty words. Real change requires action. You are worthy of love, respect, and a future where you feel safe and valued. Support is available, and you are not alone.

37. I don't have support from my parents or siblings—they convince me to stay with my abuser. What should I do?

It's incredibly difficult when the people you expect to support you encourage you to stay in an unsafe situation. But please know—your feelings are valid, and you deserve to be heard and protected.

Find Someone You Can Trust – Support doesn't always have to come from family. A kind neighbor, a close friend, a colleague, or even another parent from your child's school can be a source of strength. You don't have to go through this alone.

Build Financial Independence – Finding a job or gaining financial stability can empower you to make decisions for yourself. Independence brings confidence and control over your future.

Prioritize Your Well-Being – Don't neglect your health. Nourish yourself physically and emotionally—you need strength to stand up for yourself. You are important.

Reach Out for Professional Help – Support is available. You can contact a Protection Officer, the Women's Helpline (181), NGOs, a Magistrate, or the police station. These resources exist to help you find safety and the support you need.

You deserve to live a life free from fear and control. No matter who tells you otherwise, your safety and happiness matter. You are not alone, and there is hope.

38. I feel low in confidence and don't like sharing or speaking to anyone. What should I do?

It's completely understandable to feel this way, especially when your emotions have been dismissed or belittled. Going through such pain can make you want to withdraw from people, but isolation can also keep you from receiving the kindness, support, and encouragement you deserve.

Right now, your confidence might feel shaken, but please remember—your worth is not defined by someone else's words or actions. The strength, resilience, and capability within you are still there. Surrounding yourself with even one supportive person can remind you of that. You are more than what you've been made to believe, and you deserve to be seen, heard, and valued.

39. My husband is a good person, but when he consumes alcohol, he becomes violent and abusive. He feels sorry the next day, but I can't tolerate it. What should I do?

It's completely understandable to feel torn in this situation. The love and care you see in him when he's sober can make it difficult to process the pain caused by his actions when he drinks. However, abuse—whether verbal or physical—is never acceptable, no matter the circumstances.

Acknowledge the Pattern – It's not just a one-time incident; it's a cycle that affects you emotionally and physically. It also impacts children who witness it.

Set Boundaries – Decide what you can and cannot tolerate. When he is sober, have an open conversation about how his behavior is harming you and your family.

Don't Engage During Intoxication – Arguing or reacting when he is under the influence may escalate the situation. Prioritize your safety in those moments.

Address the Issue Early – If this pattern continues, it's crucial to address it before it worsens. Seeking professional help, support groups, or counseling can help you navigate your options.

You deserve to live in a safe, respectful environment. No matter how much he apologizes, change can only happen if he acknowledges the issue and takes active steps to stop the harmful behavior. Your well-being matters.

40. Can I file a complaint against my brother who abuses me and my mother?

Yes, you absolutely can. Under the Domestic Violence Act, 2005, a complaint can be filed against any adult male family member in a domestic relationship, not just a husband or partner. If your brother is being abusive—physically, verbally, emotionally, or financially—you have the right to seek protection.

41. Against whom can a complaint be filed under Domestic Violence Act 2005?

Any adult male member in a domestic relationship with the woman

Relatives of the husband or the male partner

Includes both male and female relatives of the male partner

42. What would I do for my safety and support? Do I have options for it?

If you're facing challenges related to finding a place to stay and ensuring safety, there are options available. NGOs and government shelter homes can provide you with a safe place to stay. Additionally, some NGOs empower you to achieve economic independence. You can access temporary support systems, engage in skill development, and complete courses to enhance your career prospects.

43. What is the difference between IPC and DVA ?

Compared to Sec: 498 (a) of the Indian Penal Code (IPC), the DVA is a civil law that gives aggrieved women their rights and practical remedies in terms of protection order, a home, monetary relief, temporary custody and compensation, among other benefits.

Sec: 498 (a) criminalises the family as an institution, but DVA aims at safeguarding the family system while also providing much relief to female victims of domestic abuse. DVA needs to be interpreted with much rationality and open-mindedness.

44. What are the things I need to keep safe while escaping from the abuser?

Think about all the items you would take with you. They may include:

- Money
- Keys to work, house, and car
- Clothes
- Important papers and certificates
- Medicine
- Social security cards
- Driver's license
- Car registration
- Medical and social records
- Welfare identification
- Work permits, Green cards, and Passports
- Insurance papers
- Address book
- Jewelry, Pictures, and anything that matters a lot
- Things for your children like blankets, clothes, and toys.

45. Can you provide me a safety plan

While you are still living with the abuser

- Go over easy ways to get out of the house
- Make sure your kids know where important phone numbers are at
- Alert your neighbors of what's going on and for them to call the police if they hear violence
- Make sure that weapons are locked up, or find ways to get them out of the house
- Don't run to your children or the abuser may hurt them as well
- Have a bag of belongings packed and in an easy-to-get-to location but well-hidden
- Think about excuses that you could get out of the house (going to the store, taking out the trash).

When Thinking about leaving the abuser

- Have options where you can go (Have a few in mind)
- Have a bank account or credit card put in your name
- Get a new cell phone
- Change the locks, get a security system and outside lights
- Think of ways to get your children to safety without being obvious

- You can also think of excuses on how to get out of the house as mentioned earlier

After you have left the abuser

- Make sure your children's school and care providers are aware of who can pick them up.
- Don't go to places your abuser knows that you go to often (stores, restaurants, businesses).
- Be sure to let friends, family, and neighbors know that the abuser is no longer allowed to come around.
- Get emotional help and support from friends and family.

Psychological and Emotional Abuse

Emotional abuse is any behavior exploiting the victim's insecurity, vulnerability, or character. It involves undermining or attempting to undermine the victim's self-worth and self-esteem. Such behaviors usually include constant degradation, brainwashing, manipulation, intimidation, or control of the other partner to the individual's detriment.

These acts constitute the following acts:

- Utilizing reality-distorting sentiments or behaviors that create confusion and insecurity in the victim, such as saying one thing and doing another, telling untrue facts as truth, and failing to follow through on declared intentions. The latter usually includes denying that the abuse happened and telling the victim they made up the abuse story. It can also include crazy behaviors like hiding the victim's keys and blaming them for losing them.
- Criticizing or insulting to undermine the victim's self-confidence. For instance, through public humiliation and actual or threatened rejection.
- Continuously ignoring, disregarding, or neglecting the other partner's requests and needs.
- Forcing the victim to take alcohol and drugs
- Not permitting the victim to practice their religious beliefs, using religion as an excuse for abuse, or isolating the victim from the religious community.
- Telling the victim, they are incompetent or mentally unstable
- Directly or indirectly threatening or accusing to cause physical or emotional harm or loss. For example, threatening to kill the victim, themselves, or both.
- Using actions, gestures, or statements attacking the victim's self-worth and self-esteem to humiliate.
- Utilizing any form of coercion or manipulation that is disempowering to the victim.

Emotional abuse is a common experience many deal with in most relationships. However, it goes beyond intimate relationships with children, relatives, and the elderly.

Isolation

Isolation is closely related to controlling behaviors discussed above. It is a unique form of domestic abuse, meaning it can be inflicted by the abuser but can also be resorted to by the victim for several valid reasons. The idea is to maintain control over their victim primarily. By keeping the victim from doing what they want to, seeing who they want to see, controlling how the victim feels and thinks, or keeping them from setting and meeting goals, the abuser isolates the victim from personal and public resources that can help them leave the relationship.

By keeping their partner isolated, the perpetrator is holding the victim from contact with the outside world, which may reinforce the victim's beliefs and perceptions. It is important to note that isolation often begins as an expression of love to their victims with sentiments such as, "if you loved me, you would want to spend time with me, not your family ." It gradually progresses, and the isolation expands, excluding or limiting their contact with anyone but the perpetrator. Finally, the victim is left alone without any internal or external resources to change their life.

It is also good to note that in other cases, the victim isolates themselves from existing support systems and resources due to shame of bruises and injuries, the abuser's treatment of family and friends, and the abuser's behavior in public. Additionally, self-isolation may develop from fear of public humiliation or harm to themselves and others. Sadly, the victim can also feel guilty for the perpetrator's behavior, the relationship condition, or several other reasons based on the messages received from the abuser.

Stalking

Stalking is a severe form of emotional and psychological abuse. It is majorly experienced by women, with four out of five cases of this abuse being against the female gender. Simply put, stalking is the unwanted and persistent pursuit of another person. The quest usually leads the victim to fear physical harm or death to themselves, friends, kids, family, and other loved ones. It may occur during or after a relationship or marriage has ended. This form of abuse can harm the victims, causing intense feelings of stress and anxiety, sleep difficulties, excessive vulnerability, depression, anger, eating disorders, and more.

Stalking has been increasingly recognized as a severe crime in the US. Safety precautions must be taken if happening to you or a loved one. Below is a list of common stalking acts:

- Watching a partner from a distance
- Surveillance of a victim at work
- Mailing cards and other cryptic messages
- Following a victim by car or on foot
- Vandalizing victim's property
- Breaking into a person's car or house
- Destroying property to intimidate or scare the victim
- Harassing notes and telephone calls
- Disrespecting visitation limitations
- Breaking into, breaking windows, or vandalizing the partner's residence
- Violating restraining orders against being in close proximity to the victim.

Controlling behavior can include the following acts:

- Monitoring the partner's phone calls using caller ID or other phone number monitoring devices, failing to allow the victim to make or receive phone calls.
- Calling or coming home unexpectedly to check up on the other partner. At first, this may appear as a loving gesture. It, however, can escalate to become a sign of jealousy and possessiveness.
- Invading a partner's privacy by not allowing them time and space
- Not allowing a person's freedom of choice regarding hairstyles and clothing style. This can include forcing the victim to dress in a particular way, for example, more seductively or conservatively than they are comfortable.
- Using children to control the other parent by utilizing kids as spies, threatening to hurt, kidnap, kill, or physical and sexual abuse. It can also include the Department of Child Safety if the victim's parent leaves the relationship.
- Encouraging or forcing dependence by making the victim believe they are incapable of surviving or performing simple tasks on their own or without the abuser.
- Checking the mileage of the odometer after the partner uses the car.

Warning Signs of Abusive Behavior

There are a number of warnings or red flags that you need to watch out for concerning abusive behavior.

Let's take a look at a few of the following.

- A terrible temper
- Can be unpredictable with their emotions
- Has total control of the finances
- Is very demeaning of their victim, whether it's done in private or out in the open
- May act extremely embarrassed or humiliated of the victim in front of other people
- Accuses the victim of going out and flirting with others, or cheating on them
- Has control on what the victim wears and how they ought to act
- Reveals extreme bouts of jealousy
- Blames the victim for the bad things that seem to be happening
- Unusually cruel to animals
- Keeps their partner from a particular birth control method
- Displays a possessive nature
- They may verbally abuse their victims

- Is extremely controlling towards their victims
- Mixed-up view of women and men and the roles that they play in a relationship
- They force themselves on their victims and have total disregard of their partner's unwillingness to have sex
- Abuses other family members or pets
- May go as far as harassing the victim while they are at work

Verbal Abuse

Verbal abuse typically involves coercion, threats, and blame. This form of abuse refers to any abusive language used to embarrass, threaten, or denigrate the other person. Verbal abuse can include the following acts:

- Name-calling such as 'ugly', 'bitch', 'whore', 'stupid', etc.
- Telling the victim, they are undesirable or unattractive
- Threatening to hurt or kill the victim, their children, pets, property, family, or reputation
- Screaming, yelling, terrorizing, rampaging, or refusing to talk

How to deal with Emotional or Verbal Abuse

- Don't try to fix them. You may want to help, but it's often difficult for abusive people to change their behavior without professional support. You can encourage them to work with a therapist, but they have to make the choice themselves.
- Avoid self-blame. Remember, you never deserve abuse, no matter what you've said or done. The only person responsible is the one engaging in abusive behavior.
- Prioritize your needs. Taking care of your physical and emotional needs can help you move forward to a place where you feel comfortable setting boundaries, reaching out for support, and leaving the abusive situation.
- Avoid engaging with them. Don't reply to their text messages, phone calls, or emails. If you can't avoid working or spending time with them, try to keep another person with you and limit your conversation to essential topics.

- Set personal boundaries. Decide how you'll avoid responding to manipulation or getting pulled into arguments. Express those limits to the person using abuse tactics and stick to them. You might say, for example, "If you call me names, I'll go home," or, "If you start teasing me in public, I'll leave."
- Build a support network. It might feel frightening to open up about what you've experienced, but reaching out to loved ones and a supportive therapist can go a long way toward helping you get the support you need to heal.
- Exit the relationship or circumstance. State clearly that the relationship is over and cut all ties, if possible. Block their number and social media accounts, and ignore attempts to reach out.
- Give yourself time to heal. Take space to focus on your needs and recovery. This might involve rediscovering your sense of self, creating a new self-care routine, and talking with a therapist who can offer guidance with recovery.

the Legal Services Authorities Act, 1987, the National Legal Services Authority (NALSA) was set up to help vulnerable sections of society with free legal services. According to NALSA, those eligible for free legal aid include

- Women
- Trans persons
- Children
- Senior citizens
- Members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes
- Industrial labourers
- Victims of mass disasters (including industrial disasters)
- Persons with disabilities

- Victims of human trafficking
- Those with low annual income, a metric which differs state by state.

Currently, Tamil Nadu provides free legal aid to people whose annual income is Rs 3 lakhs or less, in addition to those from the above-mentioned categories. A woman or a member of SC/ST or other communities as mentioned under NALSA is eligible for free legal aid, regardless of their annual income

Free legal aid is available at any stage of a case. They solve disputes in counselling and mediation centres as well, and do not always go to court unless necessary.

Abstract

In the context of higher rates of child malnutrition and widespread occurrence of spousal violence in India, the present study aimed to explore whether maternal experience of spousal violence have any association with nutritional status of their children using data on selected North and South Indian states from the National Family Health Survey (2005-2006). Our findings from bi-variate and multivariate analysis established spousal violence, which indicates the position of women within family, as a significant factor determining child nutritional status in both regions. Children whose mothers had experienced any form of physical/sexual violence were significantly more likely to be underweight compared to non-abused women. Higher educational attainment among mothers significantly reduced the likelihood of under nutrition among their children. On the other hand, higher body mass index which reflects better health status of mothers also had a significant effect in reducing the chances of malnutrition among children. Thus, the study provided adequate evidences to establish the fact that health and social status of women are critical in determining nutritional status among children. Elevating women's power relative to men's is strongly recommended to reduce malnourishment among children. Integration of violence screening and counselling with MCH programmes could be helpful in addressing the specific needs of women and children and provide essential support.

Introduction

Adequate nutrition is critical for a child's growth and development, especially during the first few years of life i.e. from birth up to two to three years of age. Nearly half of all deaths in children under 5 are attributable to under nutrition [1]. In 2016, globally there were 155 million children under 5 years of age stunted, 52 million wasted add child malnutrition after and is widespread in South Asia and sub-Saharan Africa [2]. Although child malnutrition is rampant both in Sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia, it is particularly more in South Asia referred to as the 'Asian enigma' [3]. Nutritional deficiency in children is an outcome of interplay of various factors; different socio-economic and demographic factors include household economic status, maternal literacy and fertility [3-5]. In addition to that, it is argued that mothers, as the primary caregivers, play a crucial role in determining nutritional status of children [6] and women's autonomy gained importance in this regard. The more independent mothers are to make decisions related to food, feeding practice, health care of child and allocation of household resources towards her children, the more likely her children are to be nourished [6,7] and less likely to experience deaths [8]. Under nutrition among children is often associated with marital disharmony because childcare is not only affected by a mother's direct actions but also through her social relationships with others who facilitate the care a child gets in the family [9]. In this context women's experiences of spousal violence is considered as an integral part of their autonomy as it may restrict their freedom and choices and make them highly disempowered to receive proper health care for themselves which may affect their own health as well as nutritional status of their children [3,6]. In this context, the present study tried to find out the possible linkages, if any, between nutritional status of the child and mothers experience of spousal violence in the selected states of India.

Spousal violence is defined as any abuse or violent action that occurs between two individuals in a marriage. Spousal violence has many forms including physical aggression or assault, sexual and emotional abuse, controlling or domineering [10]. The perpetration of violence by males is deeply rooted in the ideology of male dominance over women and the gender role attitudes prevailing in most south Asian countries. On the other hand, women who consider domestic violence as legitimate may have accepted violence as inevitable as a result of intergenerational transmission of the gender norms [6].

Spousal violence has emerged as an important public health concern during past few decades. The health consequences of spousal violence extend beyond mothers and translate into health consequences for their children and may be an important causal factor in child malnutrition [11]. Studies suggest that battered women are two to four times more likely to deliver low birth weight babies, which seriously affects the survival chances of the baby during infancy [12,13]. Women experiencing violence within marriage have poor status within family that leads to weaker control over household resources, tighter time constraints, less access to information and health services, poorer mental health, and lower self-esteem [3]. These factors are thought to be closely tied not only to women's own health but also to children's birth weight and the quality of care they receive [14-17]. A study in Nicaragua, based on Demographic Health Survey data, pointed out that children of battered women are malnourished, less likely to receive full immunization against childhood diseases and more prone to have disease like diarrhoea [18]. confirmed that women's experience of domestic violence increases the risk of child stunting significantly [19]. Similarly, Roushdy [20] add that after found experience of domestic violence by mothers is associated with lower height for age among their daughters.

Studies found the similar associations between poor status of women and health of their children in India. A study conducted by Jejeebhoy [21], in rural Uttar Pradesh and Tamil Nadu, found that occurrence of child death below age five were more among mothers who have experienced violence because they had less autonomy, less decision making power and less access to resources. Another study in North India found similar associations between perinatal and neonatal mortality among children whose mothers had experienced violence [22]. It may seem to be unclear as to how violence experienced by mothers leads to child death. The possible explanation as revealed in many works is that violence is associated with a very important adverse outcome of low birth weight babies which is a leading cause of infant deaths in the developing world. A study in rural Karnataka revealed that children of battered mothers received less food indicating low bargaining power of women on behalf of their children [23]. Mothers who have experienced physical and sexual violence are more likely to experience infant and child deaths, spontaneous abortions or still births than their counterparts, as have been revealed by many nationwide as well as state level research findings [24-26]. Ackerson and Subramanian's work on India revealed that there is a statistically significant association between domestic violence and chronic malnutrition among women and children. This also finds support from the findings of Sethuraman et.al. [27], a study on tribal rural community in south India. Another study by Singh et al. [28] revealed that there are significant differences between battered and non-battered women in terms of antenatal check-ups, safe delivery, immunization of children, birth-weight and pregnancy intention. The review of literature strongly suggests that reducing maternal experience of spousal violence is an important goal for improving child's health and survival, yet gaps in the current knowledge exist, further confounded by issues with how spousal violence affects nutritional status of children and the cross-cultural variations.

According to recent literature and existing national level figures, the situation of both child malnutrition and spousal violence are quite alarming in the Indian subcontinent. The prevalence of child malnutrition in India is amongst the highest levels found in any country in the world and almost twice that of Sub-Saharan African countries [29], despite its progress in food production, disease control, economic and social development [30]. In case of child malnutrition, India ranked 117 among 119 countries [31]. According to the two rounds of National Family Health Survey (1998-99 and 2005-06) estimates, around 50% of children under age 3 years were short for their age (stunted), and 43% were underweight for their age during the late nineties which declined to 45% and 40% respectively by 2005-06 [32]. India has been referred as an "economic powerhouse and nutritional weakling" [33] pointing towards the failure of economic growth to reduce the burden of malnutrition. On the other hand, India is amongst those south Asian countries where spousal violence is widely prevalent. According to national survey reports, around 37 percent of ever married women aged 15-49 years reported lifetime experience of any form of physical or sexual spousal violence in 2005-06 [32] which has reduced to 29 percent in 2015-16 [34]. Therefore, studying the association of spousal violence and nutritional status of children calls for special attention.

India is a country where the society has a very strong patriarchal foundation with non-egalitarian gender relations and women are literally powerless in every sphere of their lives. The highly stratified gender norms, discrimination of girl child right from the initiation of her life in mother's womb are very closely associated with Indian culture. However, there exists a typical regional dichotomy in socio-demographic and cultural realms, termed as the 'North-South divide' [35]. The North Indian culture is characterized by widespread early marriages among girls, low female literacy and lower female autonomy which add makes them powerless both within family and in the society. This powerlessness renders them vulnerable to different kinds of ill treatments such as controlling behaviour by husbands, infliction of violence within marriage etc. The Southern part of the country sanctions more exposure to women to the outside world, more voice in family, and more freedom of movement than the North [36,37]. Apart from the cultural differences, this regional imbalance is also prominent in various development indices consistently over a long period of time and South Indian states perform better in this regional imbalance [36]. The cultural and social heterogeneity makes it pertinent to look into North and South India separately. As gender equity is closely associated with the health of population, it is assumed that, in the North Indian states, the level of nutritional status among children will be poorer and the effect of spousal violence on child nutrition will be stronger in comparison to the South Indian states.

Under this backdrop, the present study attempted to understand the roles of spousal violence in determining nutritional status of children in India.

Methods

Study sample

We used data from the third round of Indian Demographic Health Survey (DHS) known as National Family Health Survey — NFHS-3, 2005–2006. A sample of currently married women, aged 15-30 years from few Indian states, selected on the basis of high incidence of spousal violence, was considered for analysis (Figure 1). The first group of selected states were Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan, and Uttar Pradesh with 60.8%, 49.1%, 50.2%, and 45.0% ever married women experiencing spousal violence respectively. These four states were combined as North Indian states and were referred as the North states henceforth. The second group of states consisted of Maharashtra, Andhra Pradesh, and Tamil Nadu with the level of spousal violence at 33.4%, 36.8%, and 44.1% respectively. These three states were grouped as South Indian states and were referred as the South states [32]. The selection of states was based on higher incidence of spousal violence in order to avoid the variations in the prevalence of spousal violence and to compare its effects on the nutritional status of children.

The analysis for nutritional status was done using the kid's data file on the children who were born during last five years preceding the survey to currently married mothers (aged 15-30 years) who were selected and interviewed in domestic violence module. For analysis of nutritional status of children under five years of age the sample were 7625 and 4533, North and South states respectively.

Conceptual framework

A conceptual framework (Figure 2) was developed to represent the possible linkages among different sets of variables included in the study. The main outcome of interest was child health outcomes with nutritional status of children as the main indicator. It was conceptualized that health of the children would be determined through the interplay of a set of covariates like mothers' basic background characteristics (individual and birth related), empowerment and their own health status. Spousal violence was considered as an important intermediate factor that might influence health of the children. The different variables included in the study are described below.

Outcome variables

Different variables considered as the predictor of child nutrition status were birth weight, size of the baby at the time of birth; these two variables are said to be important indicators of child's vulnerability to childhood diseases and survival chances [32]. If size of the baby was reported to be very large/ larger than average/average the response was coded as '0' normal and it was '1' less than average for responses like very small, less than average. On the other hand if the baby weighed less than 2500 g, it was coded as '0' (low birth weight) and '1' if weight was equal to or more than 2500 g.

Three important indicators of child nutrition based on anthropometric measures were a) height for age (stunting), b) Weight for height (wasting) and c) Weight for age (underweight). These three indicators were expressed in standard deviation units (Z-scores). Children were considered as 'chronically/severely stunted and malnourished' if the height-for-age Z-score was below -2SD and it represented long term effects of malnutrition in the population. Similarly, when weight-for-height Z-score was below -2SD children were considered to be acutely/severely wasted. Weight for age was a composite index for the previous two and took into account both acute and chronic malnutrition. If Z-score was below -2SD it is grouped as severely/chronically underweight and coded as '1' and it is '0' otherwise. In the present analysis this indicator was used as an outcome variable for assessing the nutritional status. Other indicators mentioned above were included in the bi-variate analysis only.

Explanatory variables

Different socio-economic and demographic characteristics were included as the intermediate variables. These variables were grouped as birth related factors: which included birth order (categorized as first, second and three or more), Preceding birth interval (categorized as '0' first birth order, '1' birth order 2/3 and <24 months, '2' birth order 2/3 and >=24 months, '3' birth order >=4 and <24 months & '4' birth order >=4 and >=24 months); pregnancy intention based on the information whether the last child was desired at that time when the woman was pregnant with it (response is coded as wanted '1', if the child was desired at that time and not wanted '2' if wanted later or not at all). Sex of the child was coded as '1' for males and '2' for females.

Factors indicating women's empowerment [39] included women's educational level (no education, primary, secondary and higher); work status (working '1' and not working '0'); media exposure (no exposure '0', any exposure '1') depending on the frequency how often the respondents read newspaper, watch television and listen to the radio. Autonomy index was developed based on the information of decision making power in terms of own health care, household purchases, visiting family/relatives, husband's earning; mobility in terms of going to market, health facility, places outside community and access to money. If the respondent participated in household decisions either alone or jointly with husband or someone, have access to money and can move unescorted (i.e. alone) the response is coded as '1' (yes) and it is '0' (no) otherwise. Autonomy index was a summative index with values ranging from 0 to 9; a score less than 5 were grouped as 'low autonomy' and otherwise as 'high autonomy'.

Mothers' body mass index (BMI) was another variable to assess the nutritional status of the mother. It was grouped as '0' less than 18.5 kg/m<sup>2</sup> and '1' 18.5 kg/m<sup>2</sup> or more.

Other socio-economic variables included in the analysis were current age of the mother, mothers age at first birth (coded as '0' for 20 years or less and '1' for more than 20 years), religion, caste, and economic status i.e. wealth quintile.

Physical/sexual violence and emotional violence

Spousal violence was considered as a component of women's empowerment and an intermediate factor determining the child nutritional status. There were nine forms of physical and sexual violence perpetrated by a husband: slapping, twisting arms or pulling hair, pushing/shaking/throwing something at wife, punching with fists or with something that could hurt wife, kicking/dragging/beating up, trying to choke/burn on purpose, threatening/attacking with a knife or a gun or any other weapon, physically forcing to have sexual intercourse even when wife did not want to, and forcing wife to perform any sexual act that she did not want to. Respondents who said 'yes' to any of the nine forms of physical or sexual violence were considered as abused women; abused women were given a code of '1' and '0' for the non-abused. For emotional violence, female respondents were asked whether their husbands ever said or did anything to humiliate her in front of others, threatened to hurt or harm her or someone close to her and insulted her to make her feel bad about herself. Respondents who answered 'yes' to any of the three forms of violence were considered to be emotionally abused and coded as '1'; for those who said 'no' to all questions, '0' was assigned.

Analysis

Analyses were performed separately for the North and South states to consider the regional variation in the nutritional status of children. The analytical part of the paper had two distinct sections. First section dealt with the child nutrition in the two regions by incidence of spousal violence. The last section examined the association of background characteristics and women's empowerment with the nutritional status of children with a special focus on spousal violence by applying binary logistic regressions. The analyses were done using SPSS (Version 21.0) statistical package.

Results

The bi-variate associations between different components of child health status and experience of spousal violence were presented in Table 1. Results revealed that there was a significant regional variation in the indicators of child health by experience of spousal violence. Children of abused women were more prone to have poor health status in the North Indian states. The standard indicators for assessing nutritional status of the children depicted that, if mothers had experienced any physical/sexual or emotional violence ever in their life, the children were at higher risk of getting poor nutritional status. While prevalence of stunting, wasting and underweight were 53%, 23% and 49% respectively among children of physically/sexually abused mothers in North Indian states, the corresponding values were 45%, 20% and 40% among children of non-abused mothers. In South Indian states the same trend was observed. In case of emotional violence similar associations were found. Other important indicators of child health were size of the baby at birth and birth weight. Children whose mothers experienced any physical/sexual or emotional violence were more prone to be smaller than the normal size and have low birth-weight.

Nutritional status of the child was analysed on the basis of prevalence of underweight. Underweight depicts chronic and severe malnutrition among children. Table 2 revealed that the percentage distribution children who are underweight by background characteristics of mother. Under-nutrition was more prevalent among children of younger mothers. Mothers living in rural areas had larger proportions of malnourished children. Prevalence of under-nutrition decreased with improving economic status. Underweight was much higher for higher birth order children in both the regions. While it was 40% and 28% among first order children in North and South states respectively, it increased to 48% and 35% respectively for third or more order. Children born out of unintended pregnancies were more undernourished than those who were wanted. Malnourishment was more for female children in the North Indian states. Women's empowerment was another important dimension. Malnourishment among children decreased with increase in mother's education level and exposure to mass media. But malnourishment was higher for the children of working mothers. Mothers' health condition revealed that underweight was more among children whose mothers had low BMI. Experience of spousal violence by mothers was also significantly associated with higher incidence of underweight among their children in both the regions.

Considering the differentials in the levels of underweight across different socioeconomic and demographic factors and mothers' experience of violence, binary logistic regression analysis was applied to understand the linkages between experience of violence by mothers and under-nutrition of children after controlling for all other important factors that may influence the nutritional status of children (Table 3). It was clear from the multivariate analysis that even after controlling for the probable effects of different socio-economic and demographic factors, mothers' experience of spousal violence was positively associated with the risk of being underweight among children. In both the regions, children of those mothers who had experienced physical/sexual abuse were significantly at higher risk of being underweight; in North Indian states children were 1.1 times more likely ( $OR=1.13, p<0.05$ ) and in South Indian states they were around 1.3 times more likely ( $OR=1.26, p<0.01$ ) to be malnourished if their mothers had experienced any spousal violence ever in their lives. It is worth mentioning that, the effects of spousal violence on prevalence of underweight among children under five years was stronger in the South Indian states. Emotional violence had a weak but significant positive effect on child nutritional status in North Indian states; children were more likely to be underweight if their mother experienced any emotional spousal violence ( $OR=1.14, p<0.10$ ).

Apart from experience of violence by mothers, there were some other important determinants like, birth related factors: higher birth order children were more likely to suffer from underweight ( $OR=1.16, p<0.05$  in North Indian states and  $OR=1.22, p<0.10$  in South Indian states) but the relation was weak. Female children in the North states were at a higher risk of being under nourished ( $OR=1.09, p<0.10$ ).

Women's empowerment also played an important role in this regard. Mothers' educational attainment was an important factor that reduced the risk of child's under nourishment significantly in both the regions. Whereas, for working mothers, children were more susceptible to be malnourished ( $OR=1.16, p<0.05$  and  $OR=1.22, p<0.05$ ) in North and South Indian states respectively. Mass media exposure among mothers significantly reduced the chance of being underweight among children in South Indian states ( $OR=0.69, p<0.01$ ). Another important factor was health of the mother which had a very strong association with child's nutritional status. If mother's nutritional status was good, the child was less likely to be underweight ( $OR=0.62, p<0.001$  in North and  $OR=0.58, p<0.001$  in South).

Discussion of Findings

The study brought out a few important factors that influenced the nutritional status of children. Findings underscore that spousal violence experienced by mothers is an important predictor of poor nutritional status of the children; children are chronically/severely malnourished, if their mothers have experienced any physical or sexual violence. Relation between maternal experience of violence, especially during pregnancy and morbidity like low birth weight of the baby, small size is well documented by existing studies [12,13,39]. Maternal experience of violence affects the survival status of the children too and this finding conforms to similar findings from other researches in Indian context [21,22,26,28]. Nutritional deficiency, small size of the baby at birth and lower birth weight are considered as two important predictors of death during the initial phase of life [32].

Presence of violence in intimate relationships emerges from a process of unequal power relations in the household, extreme dominance over females and in turn may reduce their control over resources like access to money, access to food and most importantly health care, for themselves as well as her children. The poor mental and physical state of the mother, resulting from the occurrence of violence, may be detrimental to the appropriate care giving to their children, who rely completely on their mothers during the initial years of life for growth and development. Family conflict may have a serious impact on the health status of the children sometimes directly as explained by the 'risky family environment model' [40]; exposure to recurrent family conflicts can "disturb child's stress responsive biological regulatory systems, which are important for physical and mental health [41]. 'Women's position in the household', 'quality of family relationships', autonomy and empowerment of women influence their access to proper utilization of maternal care services - like receiving all recommended antenatal services during pregnancy, delivery under trained supervision to ensure safe motherhood [42,43]. The pathway through which spousal violence affects child nutrition indicates an indirect causation firstly through maternal stress, mental health, behavioral risks, physical health and malnutrition among mothers as well as through stress experienced by the child, possible impairment of mother's ability to breastfeed and in general compromising the mother's ability to care for the child [41].

It is worth mentioning that spousal violence had a stronger influence in deteriorating children's nutritional status in the South Indian states. The reason for such stronger influence in the South could be that, when acceptance of spousal violence is closely intertwined in the society its occurrence is also high as observed in the North; in such cases, the victims tend to accept spousal violence as husband's right [44]. On the other hand, when incidence of violence is less in a society (as in the South states) and overall status of women is high, women tend to have more self-esteem and feel more victimised. Thus the impact of violence becomes manifold in the case of South Indian states. Consequently, we see that the effect of spousal violence on affecting child nutritional status was stronger among the victims in the South rather than in the North as also found by Sinha and Chattopadhyay [45] in their study on influence of spousal violence on utilization of maternal and child health care services. Studies suggest that regional differences in women's status accounts for much of the regional imbalances in child nutrition and health outcomes and the comparatively strong influence of women's status in South Asia takes us toward explaining the 'Asian enigma' [3].

Poor health condition of the mothers may limit the children's access to proper nutrition through proper dietary intake and result in severe malnutrition among them and restrict improper growth. Mothers with poor health may not be able to produce sufficient milk which is a very essential component of the child's diet up to a minimum of one year of age and is an important determinant of the future health status of the children. In Indian households limited access to food is also another aspect of violent relationships and mother in such condition lack the power to decide the proper nutritional diet both for her as well as the children. Thus, poor nutritional status among children is a major cause of higher occurrence of deaths of children before completing five years of age [40].

On the other hand, there are some other factors which are closely linked with child health. Women's education is an important factor in determining the utilization of health care and the health status of the child as well. Having better knowledge about the health care issues and better understanding of the value of health care, educated mothers can provide their children proper care and nutrition which will determine their health status. Education may foster positive values and attitudes towards the use of modern health care services. Educated women are likely to use subtle means to influence the decision of other family members in the case of health and health care specifically of the children [46]. In the present study it has been found that children of working women are more likely to be underweight, which is contrary to the idea that working women are supposed to have better empowerment and thus nutritional status of the children of these empowered mothers should be better, as indicated by other studies also [47]. At this point the nature of work that the woman does may be an important dimension to be considered. Sometimes the low wage employment is not able to create the benefits of empowerment. As suggested by some studies, poor women working as daily wage laborers are at higher risk of experiencing child under-nutrition and mortality [48].

Health of the mother is another determinant of child's nutritional status. Children of those mothers, who have poor health as expressed by low body mass index, are more likely to be nutritionally poor. Studies suggest that under-nutrition is often inter-generational in nature that affects the health of the mother and the child throughout their life cycle [49,50].

Conclusion

One potential research limitation is that the present study is based on a cross-sectional data which limited any causal inference. The exact timing of occurrence of spousal violence could not be ascertained. We were unable to determine whether the violence occurred before or after the measurement of child's nutritional status. However, to overcome this shortcoming, women's age was restricted to 15-30 years. Facts from national survey suggest that in India, incidence of violence reduces gradually at older ages i.e., above 30 years. The chances of pregnancy also decline significantly as the women grow older [32]. On the other hand, the median age at marriage in India is less than 20 years and the first onset of spousal violence is within first 2 years of marriage [32]. Therefore, by considering young married women, aged less than 30 years, we captured recent episodes of spousal violence as well as recent pregnancy. In spite of having these shortcomings, the present study effectively brought out the significant association between spousal violence and nutritional status of children. The findings of present study conform to the general socio-cultural context of Indian society, where women face discrimination throughout their life cycle. The persisting inequality between man and woman and the lower status of women are the major driving force behind the nutritional status and health of children. Therefore, it is recommended that by elevating women's power both in family and community, children's nutritional outcomes can be effectively altered. Education, as has been found in the study is an important area focusing on which may be useful in this regard. Propagating gender equality among men and women through education can be helpful in challenging the prevailing gender biased norms of the society and prevent them from transgression into the future generations. On the other hand, the linkage found between maternal experience of violence and nutritional status of children is another dimension that needs proper attention. Integration of violence screening with the maternal and child health care programmes can be helpful in exploring the risk factors related to coverage of health service and child health as well as providing proper counseling to the victims. This integrating approach may be useful to understand the short term and long term effects of spousal violence and address these issues in a better way.

“Violence against women is a manifestation of historically unequal power relations between men and women, which have led to domination over and discrimination against women by men and to the prevention of the full advancement of women...” states the United Nations Declaration on the elimination of Violence against Women, General Assembly Resolution, December, 1993.

Domestic violence is the willful intimidation, physical assault, battery, sexual assault, and/or other abusive behavior as part of a systematic pattern of power and control perpetrated by one intimate partner against another. It includes physical violence, sexual violence, psychological violence, and emotional abuse. The frequency and severity of domestic violence can vary dramatically; however, the one constant component of domestic violence is one partner's consistent efforts to maintain power and control over the other.

Domestic violence is a family problem affecting individuals in every community, regardless of age, economic status, sexual orientation, gender, race, religion, or nationality. It is often accompanied by emotionally abusive and controlling behavior that is only a fraction of a systematic pattern of dominance and control. Domestic violence can result in physical injury, psychological trauma, and in severe cases, even death. The devastating physical, emotional, and psychological consequences of domestic violence can cross generations and last a lifetime. Domestic violence can involve a wide array of physical, sexual and emotional abuse.

Domestic violence can be described as the power misused by one adult in a relationship to control another. It is the establishment of control and fear in a relationship through violence and other forms of abuse. This violence can take the form of physical assault, psychological abuse, social abuse, financial abuse or sexual assault. The frequency of the violence can be on and off, occasional or chronic. ‘Domestic violence is not simply an argument. It is a pattern of coercive controls that one person exercises over another. Abusers use physical and sexual violence, threats, emotional insults and economic deprivation as a way to dominate their victims and get their way’ (WHO, 2007).

Domestic violence is a burden on numerous sectors of the social system and quietly, yet dramatically, affects the development of a nation ... batterers cost nations fortunes in terms of law enforcement, health care, lost labor and general progress in development. These costs do not only affect the present generation; what begins as an assault by one person on another reverberates through the family and the community into the future (Zimmerman, 1994). In broad terms, domestic violence occurs when one person in an intimate relationship behaves in a way that causes fear or harm to another person. Within the general community this is the most common term.

Domestic violence is a global issue reaching across national boundaries as well as socio-economic, cultural, racial and class distinctions. This problem is not only widely dispersed geographically, but its incidence is also extensive, making it a typical and accepted behaviour. Domestic violence is wide spread, deeply ingrained and has serious impacts on women's health and wellbeing. Its continued existence is morally indefensible. Its cost to individuals, health systems and society is enormous. Yet no other major problem of public health has been so widely ignored and so little understood.

The Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005(in India) says that any act, conduct, omission or commission that harms or injures or has the potential to harm or injure will be considered domestic violence by the law. Even a single act of omission or commission may constitute domestic violence—in other words, women do not have to suffer a prolonged period of abuse before taking recourse to law. The law covers children also. Domestic violence is perpetrated by, and on, both men and women. However, most commonly, the victims are women. Even in the United States, it has been reported that 85 per cent of all violent crimes experienced by women are cases of intimate partner violence, compared to 3 per cent of violent crimes experienced by men.

Domestic violence in India is the interplay between socio-cultural factors, such as the widespread acceptance of violence as part of marital life, and of male entitlement, the equation of masculinity with dominance and control over women, and individual factors such as low self-esteem, suspicion and negativism amongst the women. As it is not only individual men who are involved in acts of domestic violence but also female kin such as mother or sister-in-law, it gives credence to the power and control and the implicit mandate of the socio-economic context of power relations rather than to male violence.

4.2 THEORIES ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Resource Theory

Resource Theory was first espoused by Goode (in 1971) and suggests that the more resources a husband brings to a relationship, the more power he has, but the less likely he will actually resort to violence. When, however, a man's superior power is threatened by a wife's access to educational or job-related resources, he may resort to violence to re-establish himself as dominant.

Exchange Theory

Exchange theory suggests that domestic violence will be particularly high in societies where its benefits to perpetrators are high and particularly low in societies where the costs to perpetrators are low. In many societies costs of violence are low because of inadequate social controls placed on such behaviour and because an emphasis on male aggressiveness actually encourages it.

The Patriarchal Theory

This theory submits that, throughout history, males have dominated society and women were to be treated as men's possessions. Patriarchal norms protect men's ability to control their wives and justify their use of violence to do so.

Modernisation Theory

Modernisation frequently leads to a valuing of universalistic over particularistic norms and achievement over ascription. Hence, we expect women (and men) to be freed from traditional gender norms as a country modernises.

Economic Dependency Theory

Economic dependency has frequently been associated with decrease in women's access to educational, economic and political resources.

4.3 CATEGORIES AND CAUSES OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

---

Although physical violence is often identified by the community as the main form of domestic violence, there are equally damaging non-physical behaviours that must be categorised as abusive and be identified. The categories of violence are:

1. Physical abuse

This includes directly assaulting a person like pushing, slapping, punching, kicking, choking, biting, shaking, inflicting burns, hair pulling, using a weapon, for example, belting, stoning, flogging with a stick, spearing, etc.

2. Sexual abuse

Trying to force someone to have sex or take part in sexual acts against their will, or using an object or body part to penetrate the vagina, mouth or anus without permission or consent, injuring sexual organs, intentionally hurting someone during sex, forcing someone to have unsafe sex, without protection against pregnancy or sexually transmitted diseases, forcing someone to take their clothes off or remain naked against their will, being made to pose for pornography or being made to look at pornography against their will, being forced to watch, observe or take part in sexual activities, voyeurism or exhibitionism, criticising sexually or making sexually degrading comments or names and any other type of sexual harassment.

2. Verbal and emotional abuse

Verbal abuse includes the intent to humiliate, degrade, demean, threaten, coerce or intimidate, and includes the use of derogatory language or continual 'put-downs' to highlight a particular part of a person's being or their societal role. Consequently, the person may experience this abuse as an attack on their identity resulting in psychological harm. As a result, verbal abuse is closely related to emotional abuse. Emotional or psychological abuse can leave a person feeling that they are to blame for the problems in the family or in a relationship.

3. Spiritual or cultural abuse

It is when power and control is used to deny a partner or family member their human, cultural or spiritual rights and needs. It can also include using religion or culture as an excuse to commit particular abuses to justify the behaviour.

4. Social abuse

Social abuse and isolation is commonly used by perpetrators to separate the victim from supportive friends, family and community agencies. This has particular relevance for women in rural and remote areas where there is limited access to cheap transportation, where firearms are more common, there is increased isolation from neighbours and support services, and communities are small. This abuse may also be more prevalent for women from culturally and linguistically diverse communities.

6 Economic or financial abuse

This involves the unequal control of finances in a relationship or family and the deprivation of basic necessities.

Causes for Domestic Violence

There is no one single factor to account for violence perpetrated against women. Several complex and interconnected institutionalised social and cultural factors have kept women particularly vulnerable to the violence directed at them, all of them manifestations of historically unequal power relations between men and women. Factors contributing to these unequal power relations include: socio-economic forces, the family institution where power relations are enforced, fear and control over female sexuality, belief in the inherent superiority of males and legislation and cultural sanctions that have traditionally denied women and children an independent legal and social status. Lack of economic resources underpins women's vulnerability to violence and their difficulty in extricating themselves from a violent relationship. The link between violence and lack of economic resources and dependence is circular. On the one hand, the threat and fear of violence keeps women from seeking employment, or, at best, compels them to accept low-paid, home-based exploitative labour, and on the other hand, without economic independence women have no power to escape from an abusive relationship. The reverse of this argument also holds true in some countries; that is, women's increasing economic activity and independence is viewed as a threat which leads to increased male violence. This is particularly true when the male partner is unemployed, and feels his power undermined in the household. Excessive consumption of alcohol and other drugs has also been noted as a factor in provoking aggressive and violent male behaviour towards women and children. The isolation of women in their families and communities is known to contribute to increased violence, particularly if those women have little access to family and local organisations.

Domestic violence against women is an age-old phenomenon. Women were always considered weak, vulnerable and in a position to be exploited. Violence has long been accepted as something that happens to women. Cultural mores, religious practices, economic and political conditions may set the precedence for initiating and perpetuating domestic violence, but ultimately committing an act of violence is a choice that the individual makes out of a range of options. Although one cannot underestimate the importance of macro system- level forces (such as cultural and social norms) in the aetiology of gender- based violence within any country, including India, individual-level variables (such as observing violence between one's parents while growing up, absent or rejecting father, delinquent peer associations) also play important roles in the development of such violence. The gender imbalance in domestic violence is partly related to differences in physical strength. Moreover, women are socialised into their gender roles in different societies throughout the world. In societies with a patriarchal power structure and with rigid gender roles, women are often poorly equipped to protect themselves if their partners become violent. However, much of the disparity relates to how men- dependence and fearfulness amount to a cultural disarmament. Husbands who batter wives typically feel that they are exercising a right, maintaining good order in the family and punishing their wives' delinquency—especially the wives' failure to keep their proper place (WHO, 2001).

Women's Task Force Report, 2000, reveals that 'work related stresses, gambling and financial debt, the use of drugs/alcohol, and access to firearms have also been identified as additional causal factors for domestic violence, though they may also be linked to poor impulse control'. The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Women's Task Force Report on violence indicated that alcohol often facilitated violence by providing a socially acceptable excuse for the negative behaviour.

Jejeebhoy (1998) is of the view that not only wife beating is deeply entrenched, but also people justify it. Thus, domestic violence is simply not a personal abnormality but rather it roots in the cultural norms of the family and the society.

Again, looking from another angle, it is found that many of the victims of domestic violence has either refused to name the perpetrator of the assault or attributed the injuries to other reasons (Daga et al., 1999).

Murthy et al. (2004) are of the view that number of family members, type of marriage and husband's education besides menstrual problems have significant influence on domestic violence.

4.4 IMPACT OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Violence not only causes physical injury, it also undermines the social, economic, psychological, spiritual and emotional well-being of the victim, the perpetrator and the society as a whole. Domestic violence is a major contributor to the ill health of women. It has serious consequences on women's mental and physical health, including their reproductive and sexual health. These include injuries, gynaecological problems, temporary or permanent disabilities, depression and suicide, amongst others.

Many forms of verbal and psychological abuse appear relatively harmless at first, but expand and grow more menacing over time, sometimes gradually and subtly. As victims adapt to abusive behavior, the verbal or psychological tactics can gain a strong 'foothold' in victims' minds, making it difficult for them to recognise the severity of the abuse over time. (National Centre for Elderly Abuse, 2005)

These physical and mental health outcomes have social and emotional sequelae for the individual, the family, the community and the society at large. Over both the short term and long term, women's physical injuries and mental trouble either interrupts, or ends, their educational and career paths leading to poverty and economic dependence. Family life gets disrupted which has a significant effect on children, including poverty (if divorce or separation occurs) and a loss of faith and trust in the institution of the family. These sequelae not only affect the quality of life of individuals and communities, but also have long-term effects on social order and cohesion (WHO, 2001). The physical health consequences of domestic violence are often obscure, indirect and emerge over the long term. For example, women who were subject to violent attacks during childhood are bothered by menstrual problems and irritable bowel syndrome in later life (WHO, 2001).

Domestic violence is the most common form of violence against women. It affects women across the life span from sex selective abortion of female foetuses to forced suicide and abuse, and is evident, to some degree, in every society in the world. The WHO (2007) reports that the proportion of women who had ever experienced physical or sexual violence or both by an intimate partner ranged from 15 to 71 per cent, with the majority between 29 and 62 per cent. India's National Family Health Survey-III, carried out in 29 states during 2005– 2006, has found that a substantial proportion of married women have been physically or sexually abused by their husbands at some time in their lives. The survey indicated that nationwide, 37.2 per cent of women 'experienced violence' after marriage. Bihar was found to be the most violent, with the abuse rate against married women being as high as 59 per cent. Strangely, 63 per cent of these incidents were reported from urban families rather than the state's most backward villages. It was followed by Madhya Pradesh (45.8 per cent), Rajasthan (46.3 per cent), Manipur (43.9 per cent), Uttar Pradesh (42.4 per cent), Tamil Nadu (41.9 per cent) and West Bengal (40.3 per cent). Even these alarming figures are likely to be significantly under estimated given that violence within families continues to be a taboo subject in both industrialised and industrialising countries (Ministry of Health and Family Welfare, 2006).

Gender-based violence imposes obstacles to the full participation of women in social, economic and political life. Illustrating the importance of this issue is the call of the UN Millennium Project Task Force on Education and Gender Equality for a global campaign on violence against women under the leadership of the UN Secretary-General. The UN Millennium Project affirms that 'freedom from violence, especially for girls and women' is a core right and essential to the ability to lead a productive life (UNO, n.d.). Gender-based violence directly jeopardises the achievement of the MDGs related to gender equality and the empowerment of women, infant and maternal health and mortality. It is in this context that studies needs to be conducted regarding the perspectives of women towards gender-based violence. A clear understanding of this will help in tackling the problem effectively. For decades, women's rights advocates and international agencies such as the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) have worked to promote a culture of zero tolerance for violence against women. An increasing number of communities, coalitions and countries are mobilising around the cause. Still the problem persists. It is the time to change the strategies to address the issue (UNICEF, n.d.).

Impact on Children

Children who have witnessed domestic violence or have themselves been abused, exhibit unhealthy behaviour problems, including problems with their weight and their eating and sleep habits. They may have difficulty at school and find it hard to develop close and positive friendships. They may try to run away or even display suicidal tendencies.

4.5 STEPS TO DECREASE VIOLENCE ON WOMEN

---

Several efforts are being made to address the issue. Two important measures are legal measures and awareness campaigns targeting women asking them to develop zero tolerance. Gender-based violence is entrenched in the culture of developing nations; hence it is the time to change that culture. There is lot of awareness programmes conducted regarding the issue. In almost all the awareness programmes the contents are legal issues, counselling facilities and measures to take the support of the police. In large majority of the cases the audience is women. There is a need for change in this way of thinking and believing. In fact, the men and women are integral part of the society. Some of the steps to decrease violence on women are:

1. Attitude of men towards women

Most of the men are made to believe their masculinity is established only when they are able to achieve supremacy over the women in their lives. It is expected that the men must treat the women in their lives with dignity considering them as a separate individuals having their own aspirations and choices in life.

2. Attitude of women towards men

In the process of socialisation itself women are made to accept the superiority of their male counterparts. She is always made to believe that the ‘male members in her life will take major decisions regarding her life’. Women are actually responsible for their lives. It is here that the change in the attitude is required.

3. Attitude of women towards women

Women are generally made to think that they are weak, they have to accept whatever their male counterparts decide. In many cases, the mothers and mothers-in-law will try to pass on such thinkings to their daughter/daughters- in-law. However, it is the responsibility of all like minded women to alter such attitudes and make the women to take responsibility for her life. More and more efforts must be made to bring changes in the said areas which will in turn reduce the rate of domestic violence.

4. Social Networks

Women’s participation in social networks has been noted as a critical factor in lessening their vulnerability to violence and in their ability to resolve domestic violence. These networks could be informal (family and neighbours) or formal (community organisations, women’s self-help groups or affiliation to political parties).

5. Quality of Family Life

Most important measure is to enhance the quality of family life. While discussing about the causes we have understood that individuals at times become violent due to some other stressors in life and in large majority of the cases work life stress or economic factors. The most important things that are required in their life are proper life skills and right attitude towards life. It is in this area that people are in need of training. Hence efforts in this direction must be increased. Such changes will lay a strong foundation for a healthy society where men and women treat each other with love, affection, respect and dignity. This is what is required for a healthy society. Not merely the absence of violence but the presence of positive emotions towards their female counterparts.

4.6 LET US SUM UP

Women and men form an inseparable whole whether in a family, a society or a nation as a whole. Both need to work together to have a healthy family, healthy society and healthy nation. Hence efforts must be made to enhance the quality of life of the individuals which will in turn bring changes in many ways. Any other effort without doing the base work will address the issue at the surface level and the problem will always persist underneath.

4.9 ANSWERS TO CHECK YOUR PROGRESS

Check Your Progress I

1) The three categories of domestic violence are:

1) Physical abuse

This includes directly assaulting a person like pushing, slapping, punching, kicking, choking, biting, shaking, inflicting burns, hair pulling, using a weapon, for example, belting, stoning, flogging with a stick, spearing, etc.

2) Sexual abuse

Trying to force someone to have sex or take part in sexual acts against their will, or using an object or body part to penetrate the vagina, mouth or anus without permission or consent, injuring sexual organs, intentionally hurting someone during sex, forcing someone to have unsafe sex, without protection against pregnancy or sexually transmitted diseases, forcing someone to take their clothes off or remain naked against their will, being made to pose for pornography or being made to look at pornography against their will, being forced to watch, observe or take part in sexual activities, voyeurism or exhibitionism, criticising sexually or making sexually degrading comments or names and any other type of sexual harassment.

3) Verbal and emotional abuse

Verbal abuse includes the intent to humiliate, degrade, demean, threaten, coerce or intimidate, and includes the use of derogatory language or continual ‘put-downs’ to highlight a particular part of a person’s being or their societal role. Consequently, the person may experience this abuse as an attack on their identity resulting in psychological harm. As a result, verbal abuse is closely related to emotional abuse. Emotional or psychological abuse can leave a person feeling that they are to blame for the problems in the family or in a relationship.

- 2) Several complex and interconnected institutionalised social and cultural factors have kept women particularly vulnerable to the violence directed at them, all of them manifestations of historically unequal power relations between men and women. Factors contributing to these unequal power relations include: socio-economic forces, the family institution where power relations are enforced, fear and control over female sexuality, belief in the inherent superiority of males and legislation and cultural sanctions that have traditionally denied women and children an independent legal and social status. Lack of economic resources and even women’s increasing economic activity and independence is viewed as a threat. Excessive consumption of alcohol and other drugs has also been noted as a factor in provoking aggressive and violent male behaviour towards women and children. Women having little access to family and local organisations.

Husbands who batter wives typically feel that they are exercising a right, maintaining good order in the family and punishing their wives’ delinquency—especially the wives’ failure to keep their proper place (WHO, 2001).

Women’s Task Force Report, 2000, reveals that ‘work related stresses, gambling and financial debt, the use of drugs/alcohol, and access to firearms have also been identified as additional causal factors for domestic violence, though they may also be linked to poor impulse control’. The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Women’s Task Force Report on violence indicated that alcohol often facilitated violence by providing a socially acceptable excuse for the negative behaviour.

The District Magistrate (DM) Office plays a central administrative, coordination, and oversight role in domestic violence cases under the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005 (PWDVA). While the police and Protection Officers handle direct interventions, the DM's office provides institutional support, supervision, and interdepartmental coordination to ensure that victims receive timely protection and assistance.

Key Roles of the District Magistrate Office in Domestic Violence Cases

1. Appointing and Supervising Protection Officers

Under Section 8 of the PWDVA, the State Government appoints Protection Officers, typically from the District Probation Office or Women and Child Development Department, under the administrative control of the District Magistrate. The DM ensures that Protection Officers: are appointed in adequate numbers, functioning effectively and supported with infrastructure, transport, and manpower.

2. Interagency Coordination

The DM coordinates with: Superintendent of Police (SP)/SSP, Judiciary/Magistrates, NGOs and legal aid services, Medical and shelter homes etc. It also ensures that all government arms work together for the rescue, shelter, legal aid, and rehabilitation of domestic violence survivors.

3. Support for Victim Services

Ensures the availability and maintenance of: Shelter homes, Counselling centres, One Stop Centres (OSCs), Medical facilities, Legal aid etc. It issues administrative directions to relevant departments (health, social welfare, police) to respond quickly in DV cases.

4. Emergency Powers and Orders

In crisis cases or when the court is not immediately accessible, the DM can: Issue temporary protection orders or prohibitory orders, intervene directly to evacuate or protect women from violent households and direct the police to take urgent preventive action.

5. Monitoring Implementation of PWDVA

- Reviews and monitors the implementation of the Act in the district.
- Holds monthly or quarterly review meetings with: Protection Officers, Police, Judicial officers, NGO partners etc.
- Reviews data on number of cases, orders issued, action taken, etc.

6. Budgeting and Resource Allocation

The DM ensures allocation of resources (vehicles, staff, funds) for: Protection Officers, Legal awareness campaigns, Training and sensitisation programmes etc. It can recommend funding under schemes like Mission Shakti, Beti Bachao Beti Padhao, or State-specific women protection schemes.

7. Grievance Redressal

Victims, NGOs, or citizens can approach the DM's grievance cell if: Police refuse to act, Protection Officers are unresponsive, Courts delay orders. The DM can also call a meeting, initiate inquiries, and take corrective steps.

8. Public Awareness and Capacity Building

Organises or supports IEC campaigns (Information, Education, Communication) on domestic violence laws and women's rights. Supports training of police officers, Protection Officers, and NGOs on the PWDVA and victim-friendly approaches.

9. Reporting to State Government

Sends periodic reports on: Functioning of Protection Officers, Implementation challenges, District-level statistics on DV cases, Need for additional shelters or staff.

Legal Backing and Institutional Role

- PWDVA, 2005 – Sections 8, 9, and 11 imply the administrative role of the DM.
- CrPC Section 144 – DM has powers to issue urgent orders in cases of danger or threat to life.
- Juvenile Justice Act, One Stop Centre Scheme, and State Action Plans on Women – Provide the DM with tools to support vulnerable women and children.

The Senior Superintendent of Police (SSP) holds a senior supervisory and administrative position in larger districts (typically metropolitan or highly populated areas). Their role in domestic violence cases builds upon that of the SP but with additional layers of command responsibility, inter-agency coordination, and oversight.

1. Overall Command and Policy Implementation

The SSP is in charge of all police operations in the district and is responsible for ensuring that domestic violence cases are handled sensitively, lawfully, and efficiently. Ensures uniform policy implementation across all police stations in the district regarding registration of cases, investigation, and victim support.

2. Monitoring Police Station Performance

Reviews how individual SHOs (Station House Officers) and Circle Officers are handling domestic violence complaints. He can take disciplinary action against officers who fail to register FIRs, delay investigations, or behave insensitively towards victims.

3. Victim Safety and Crisis Response

Directs police to provide emergency protection, including deploying personnel to prevent further violence. Can order immediate rescue operations, escorting victims to safe shelters, and enforcing Magistrate's protection or residence orders.

4. High-Level Interagency Coordination

Coordinates with: Protection Officers (appointed under the PWDVA), District Magistrate, Legal Services Authorities and even with Women's helplines or NGOs. SSP also plays a key role in convening District Coordination Committees or reviewing meetings on crimes against women.

5. Sensitization and Capacity Building

Ensures regular training programs for police personnel on: Domestic violence laws (especially Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005), Gender-sensitive policing, Victim handling protocols, may invite experts or NGOs for workshops and field guidance.

6. Handling Escalated or Serious Cases

Personally intervenes in serious or high-profile cases such as: Dowry-related deaths (Section 304B IPC), Custodial abuse, Repeated non-compliance of court orders etc. It also ensures proper investigation, forensic evidence collection, and filing of charge sheets within stipulated time.

7. Reporting and Public Accountability

Submits periodic crime reports to the Inspector General (IG) or Zonal DIG, especially on gender-based violence trends. Responds to Human Rights Commission inquiries, judicial summons, or RTI queries related to police inaction or mishandling of DV cases.

8. Technology and Grievance Redressal

Oversees functioning of: Women Help Desks in police stations, Domestic violence helplines (e.g., 112, 1090), Online complaint portals etc. SSP can also order internal inquiries based on complaints from citizens or media reports.

Key Legal and Administrative Context:

- PWDVA, 2005 – Focuses on the police's obligation to act upon complaints, inform victims, and support Protection Officers.
- CrPC Sections 154, 160, 161 – Deal with registration of FIRs, summoning witnesses, and recording statements.
- Police Act and Police Manual – SSPs are expected to enforce codes of conduct and service standards in cases involving vulnerable groups.

The Superintendent of Police (SP) plays a crucial supervisory and enforcement role in domestic violence cases under the Indian legal and policing framework. While Protection Officers (usually appointed under the Department of Women and Child Development) have a direct role under the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005 (PWDVA), the SP ensures that the law is enforced effectively through the police machinery. Here's a breakdown of their role:

1. Supervision and Accountability

The SP supervises police stations in their district and ensures prompt registration of FIRs (First Information Reports) in domestic violence cases. They ensure compliance with court orders, such as protection orders, residence orders, and custody orders issued under the PWDVA. They are responsible for checking delays or negligence by Station House Officers (SHOs) in such cases.

2. Coordination with Protection Officers and Magistrates

The SP coordinates with Protection Officers, who are key functionaries under the PWDVA. They ensure that police assist the Protection Officer in implementing the Magistrate's directions, including rescue operations or enforcement of restraining orders.

3. Police Response & Victim Protection

- The SP ensures prompt police response to domestic violence complaints.
- Orders the police to provide protection to the victim (woman) and her dependents.
- Ensures that the woman is not forcibly returned to a violent environment.

4. Capacity Building and Sensitization

- The SP can organize training and sensitization programs for police personnel on gender sensitivity and legal provisions under the PWDVA and IPC (Indian Penal Code) sections like 498A, 323, 506, etc.

5. Monitoring and Reporting

- The SP may be asked to report progress of investigations or compliance with court orders to the District Magistrate or the court.
- May be held accountable by courts in Public Interest Litigations (PILs) or in cases of police inaction.

6. Intervention in High-Risk or Escalating Cases

In cases of repeat violence, dowry deaths, or when the woman is in imminent danger, the SP can take urgent preventive action, including arresting the accused, and arranging shelter or medical aid for the victim.

Legal Basis:

- Section 5 of the PWDVA, 2005 mentions the role of the police in informing victims about their rights.
- Section 18–23 of PWDVA deals with orders that need police enforcement.
- Indian Penal Code (IPC) sections like 498A, 304B, and 376 often run parallel to DV cases and are policed under the SP's supervision.
